One of the Heaviest Examples of "Yap Stone" Money (rai stone) to Appear in Public Auction!

1109. MICRONESIA: Yap, rai stone money (43.5kg), ca. 1871-1931, Opitz p.316-21, Quiggin p.144, 62 x 58 x 9cm, 96lbs, post-O'Keefe type, made from crystalline calcite, holed in the center, accompanied by two wooden storyboards (with sawtooth hangers for mounting) and a flag of the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands (used 1965-1980), one of the heaviest examples of this famous ethnographic currency to ever appear in a public auction! XF, ex Clifford M. Ray Collection $10,000 - 15,000

Known locally as raai or fei, the Yap stone money is a disc-shaped stone with a hole in the center for transportation, with sizes ranging from 12 feet to a mere two inches in diameter. The rock for the stone money is not found on Yap itself and was instead sourced from Palau, located some 280 miles (450km) away. Prior to the arrival of European traders, a Yapese chief would grant permission to a work crew to sail to Palau, manufacture the money, and bring them back in their outrigger canoes. Due to the limited means of transportation, these stones were no larger than four feet. Bigger examples did not appear until after the arrival of Western traders and their large ships in the late 19th century.

While smaller stones could be carried for a transaction, the larger ones were not physically exchanged but simply displayed in public, often outside of one's house or on the side of a road. Instead, much like today's cryptocurrencies, each stone has a unique oral history of ownership that is agreed upon and widely known to the community. In fact, one stone, according to oral tradition, fell into the ocean during a storm just before it reached the island. But because everyone agreed that the stone was still there, it continued to be used just like any other stone money, long after anyone had laid eyes on it.

Stone money was produced as late as 1931, and a contemporary survey found a total of 13,281 pieces on Yap. However, many were destroyed and used for road construction during WWII, and only half are estimated to have survived to the present day. As a result of their scarcity, the Yapese government imposed severe restrictions on their export in 1965 and has since allowed only a small number of stones to leave the island, mostly as gifts to foreign dignitaries. Hence all examples of the stone money on the market today are very rare and highly sought after.

The consignor arrived on Yap on June 1, 1971, as a member of Seabee 6207 of US Naval Mobile Construction Battalion 62. For eight months, the 13-member team worked on a goodwill mission to upgrade Yap's civic infrastructures, including the building of culverts, a bridge, a school, and housing for the local people. As an expression of gratitude, the Yapese presented stone money as gifts to members of Seabee 6207 before their departure on January 31, 1972. This includes an example currently on display at the US Navy Seabee Museum in Port Hueneme, CA. By the same token, the consignor was able to export the stone being offered here, which he purchased from a Paulus Dabgusiy of Arngel Village in Dalipebinaw Municipality, with the approval of the village chief, the municipal magistrate, and the Office of the District Administrator.

See image of the sale receipt online, whose original copy has been lost. The print had faded, hence the photo was later superimposed with digital text by the consignor.

A Very Rare "Russian Influence" Korean 5 Chon

1207. KOREA: Kuang Mu, 1897-1907, 5 chon, year 6 (1902), KM-1122, Russian Influence series, one year type struck at the Yongsan mint, PCGS graded XF40 $7,000 - 9,000

Between 1898 and 1905, Russia actively pursued its imperialistic ambitions in Korea, aiming to expand its dominance and secure strategic gains in the region. The design of this one-year type shows that influence with a Russian style eagle with eight Korean taegukgi and trigrams on the wings representing water, heaven, thunder, wind, mountain, earth, lake, and fire and a central taegeuk at center. Russia's defeat in the Russo-Japanese War of 1904-05 ended its designs on the Korean Peninsula. This has always been a popular issue in Korean numismatics and scarce in any condition.

Minting equipment from the Incheon mint was moved to Yongsan in September of the year 1900 and cupronickel coins at this time were struck in small quantities. The Korean government, under pressure, signed a treaty recognizing Japanese protection on February 23, 1904. The Yongsan mint would close in November 1904 after the Japanese occupation began.

Spades of this type are found in Northeast Henan and Shanxi, the territory of the Duchy of Jin, later to become Zhao. They are held to be somewhat later in date than the square shouldered spades. Their shape seems to be designed for ease of tying together in bundles, rather than deriving from any particular agricultural instrument.

The State of Chu was an ancient Chinese state in the Yangtze valley during the Zhou Dynasty. Originally Chu was considered a viscountcy, but starting from King Wu in the early 8th century BC, the rulers of Chu declared themselves kings on an equal footing with the Zhou rulers. Originally known as Jing and then as Jingchu, Chu occupied vast areas of land at its height, including most of the present-day provinces of Hubei and Hunan, along with parts of Chongqing, Guizhou, Henan, Anhui, Jiangxi, Jiangsu, Zhejiang, and Shanghai. The hao in the reverse inscription shi hao probably refers to ten ant nose type coins. These spades are thick and robust with well developed rims all the way around, with a large round hole in the top.

The "Bai Jin San Pin" (White metal three kinds), according to the Records of the Grand Historian, was introduced in 119 BC during the reign of Emperor Wu as both the Han-Xiongnu War and the territorial expansion of the Han Empire caused the imperial government to desperately increase their revenues. Among the reasons why the government started issuing this new type of currency was to remedy the inflation caused by the excessive issuance of bad money, but the Bai Jin San Pin would prove to be an insufficient solution. The Records of the Grand Historian claim that the new "Bai Jin" (white metal) money was a mixture of silver and tin. The term San Pin refers to the fact that it was a series of three coins with different denominations: Dragon 3000 cash coins, Horse 500 cash coins and Tortoise 300 cash coins.

Possibly cast in Balasagun, which was an ancient Sogdian city in modern-day Kyrgyzstan, located in the Chuy Valley between Bishkek and Issyk-Kul Lake. Balasagun was the capital of the Western Liao Dynasty (1124-1218), also known as Qara Khitay ("Black Cathay"). It was founded by Yelü Dashi, a member of the Liao royal family, who led the remnants of the Liao Dynasty to Central Asia after fleeing from the Jurchen conquest of their homeland in the North and Northeast of modern-day China. It was usurped by the Naimans under Küchlük in 1211 and finally destroyed by the Mongol Empire in 1218. See www.zeno.ru/showgallery.php?cat=9299 for articles (in Russian, Chinese & English) on the coinage of this dynasty.

Da Chao, meaning "Great Dynasty", was the Chinese name the Mongols used for themselves. According to Hartill, "This [silver] coin is alleged to have been cast by the legendary Genghis Khan at his capital at Karakorum." This would place the date about 50-60 years prior to the formal foundation of the Yuan dynasty in 1271. A more likely attribution by Belyaev & Sidorovich (2017) puts this series between 1251 and 1262 during the reign of Möngke Khan and the early years of Kublai Khan.
